Do You Know

that A. G. Spalding & Bros. spend thousands of dollars in making just one implement—or a single ball? Sometimes a bat—a racket—or a pair of shoes. The first ones that are made cost each a small fortune. Made—Remade—Tested. Champions try and test them. And the models get the worst of usage. Then any faults appearing are at once righted. Only when perfected—after the severest tests—do we offer them to the public.

Jimmy Walsh of Boston claimed the title, and went over to England to fight Digger Stanley for the international championship, May 24, 1909. It resulted in a twenty-round draw. ### LIGHTWEIGHT CHAMPIONS.

Lightweight champions were not classified to any extent until the early 80's, when Jack McAuliffe, Billy Frasier, George Fulljames, Harry Gilmore and others began to figure as 128 to 133 pounders. There were no recognized lightweight champions, as a class, in England, previous to the 70's, although claims were made by the stars in both countries. At least we fail to find records of such. About the first champion in America was Abe Hicken, who claimed the title, and defeated Pete McGuire in five rounds, December 23, 1868, at Perryville, Md. It is presumed that Hicken retired and the title lapsed.

Joe Collyer of England claimed the title about this time, as did Billy Edwards and Arthur Chambers for America. Edwards defeated Collyer and then Arthur Chambers, and Edwards fought for the title September 4, 1872, at Whirlpool Island, St. Clair river, Canada, Chambers winning on a foul in thirty-five rounds.

March 27, 1879—Arthur Chambers defeated Johnny H. Clark at Chippewa Falls, Canada, 136 rounds, for title and belt, bare knuckles. Weight, 133 ringside.

Charlie Norton claimed the title and was to have met George Fulljames, but the match fell through. Norton did not defend the title.

There was another lapse of the title as Chambers retired. In 1884-5 Jack Dempsey became the recognized king of lightweights, having beaten such men as Jimmy Mitchell, George Fulljames, Tom Henry, Billy Dacey, Bob Trumbull, Jack Keenan, Jimmy Murray, and Bill Frasier, but he advanced into the welterweight class and later into the middleweight class.

1885—Jack McAuliffe won several amateur lightweight championship tournaments which Billy Madden held in New York, and on May 11, 1885, challenged Jimmy Mitchell for the professional championship. Mitchell declined, and McAuliffe claimed and defended it.

Feb. 27, 1886—Jack McAuliffe beat Jack Hopper in seventeen rounds, New York.

Oct. 29, 1886—Jack McAuliffe knocked out Bill Frazier, twenty-one rounds, Boston. (Frazier afterwards forfeited to McAuliffe on Dec. 15.)

Jan. 14, 1887—Jack McAuliffe defeated Harry Gilmore, twenty-eight rounds, Lawrence, Mass., $500 a side and championship belt, 133 ringside, skin gloves. Gilmore's backers gave up because of his broken nose. McAuliffe was nearly blinded at the time.

Nov. 16, 1887—Jack McAuliffe fought a draw with Jem Carney of England, seventy-four rounds, Revere, Mass. (Ring was broken into by men who had money wagered.) $4,500 a side.

Aug. 26, 1895—Kid Lavigne knocked out Jimmy Handler, five rounds, Maspeth, L. I.

Sept. 9, 1905—Battling Nelson knocked out Jimmy Britt, eighteen rounds, Colma, Cal.

(Between the years 1902 and 1906, Joe Gans, who had won the title from Frank Erne, could not, or would not, make weight, 133 ringside, and fought welterweights, with the result that Jimmy Britt of California claimed the title and defended it, finally losing to Battling Nelson, when Nelson claimed it and fought Gans for it in their memorable battle at Goldfield, Nev., in 1906.)

1910—Mike Sullivan outgrew the welterweight class and the title was claimed by Jimmy Gardner, and in turn by Jimmy Clabby when Gardner outgrew it. Clabby defended the title and had the newspaper decisions over Dixie Kid in New York, ten rounds, in 1910.

1910—Jimmy Clabby knocked out Guy Buckles in thirteen rounds at Sheridan, Wyo., September 5, for advertised welterweight title. Clabby went to Australia, and on November 2, 1910, defeated Bob Bryant for the title, at Sydney, in seven rounds. Clabby also defeated Gus Devitt, the New Zealand champion, for the title in one round at Brisbane, Que., Dec. 26, 1910.

1911—Jimmy Clabby entered the middleweight class, and Ray Bronson of Indianapolis, Ind., claimed the welter title. Clarence (Kid) Ferns also claimed the title. There was no recognized champion up to 1913, when Ray Bronson put up a forfeit to fight any one for the championship, and in November sailed for Australia to fight the British champion for the title. Packey McFarland would no doubt have been recognized as champion had he claimed it, but he preferred to remain as a lightweight. Mike Gibbons also claimed it, but could not do 142 at 3 or 145 ringside, the American weight.

1914—Ray Bronson was beaten by Matt Wells of England in seven rounds at Sydney, N. S. W., Feb. 7, and gave up all claim to title. Wells beat Tom McCormick, who claimed English title from Johnny Summers. American title was then claimed by Kid Graves, Mike Glover and Spike Kelly.

MIDDLEWEIGHT CHAMPIONS.

The first battle of record for the middleweight championship of America was fought on April 13, 1867, in California, when Tom Chandler, who claimed the title, defeated Dooney Harris in twenty-three rounds, for $5,000 a side, bare knuckles.

1868—George Rooke claimed the title and held it until 1874, losing it to Mike Donovan.

1874—Mike Donovan held the title till 1882. From this time the title lapsed till 1884, when Jack Dempsey, the great Nonpariel, claimed it.

1884—Jack Dempsey defeated George Fulljames July 30 in twenty-two rounds (title match).

1886—Jack Dempsey knocked out Jack Fogarty, February 3, in New York, in twenty-seven rounds.

1886—Jack Dempsey beat George LaBlanche, March 14, Westchester, N. Y., in thirteen rounds, for $3,500 a side and belt.

1887—Jack Dempsey knocked out Johnny Reagan in forty-five rounds, at Long Island, December 13.

1889—George LaBlanche defeated Jack Dempsey in thirty-two rounds (using foul pivot blow, which was afterwards barred), at San Francisco, August 27.

1889—George LaBlanche claimed the title till 1891, when he was knocked out by Young Mitchell in twelve rounds at San Francisco, February 20. Jack Dempsey was again recognized as champion, and on January 14, 1891, he met Bob Fitzsimmons for the world's title, being knocked out in thirteen rounds at New Orleans.

1893—Bob Fitzsimmons knocked out Jim Hall in four rounds at New Orleans, March 8.

1894—Bob Fitzsimmons knocked out Dan Creedon in two rounds at New Orleans, September 26.

1896—Bob Fitzsimmons entered the heavyweight class and his middleweight title was claimed by both Kid McCoy and Tommy Ryan. Technically, Fitzsimmons was still champion middleweight as he could make the weight and always was ready to defend his title, but there appeared a better field among the heavyweights.

1897—Kid McCoy was recognized by some boxing authorities as middleweight champion, although disputed the claim. Ryan retired in 1907. Jack O'Brien also claimed the title, and was considered as good as any, but he could not make the weight any longer and the title lapsed for a time until Stanley Ketchell came out and claimed it. He was awarded the crown after his defeat of Jack (Twin) Sullivan, another claimant, in twenty rounds, at San Francisco, Feb. 22, 1908.

1911—Cyclone Johnny Thompson defeated Billy Papke in twenty rounds on points at Sydney, N. S. W., February 11. Thompson was at weight while Papke was overweight, and Cyclone claimed the title. Both Papke and Thompson outgrew the middleweight limit in 1912, and the title was again in abeyance.

Since 1912, Jimmy Clabby, Frank Klaus, Eddie McGoorty, Jack Dillon and George Chip have been claimants of the title. Clabby and Chip are legitimate middleweights. The others want 158 to 160 at 3 o'clock. Clabby, Chip, McGoorty and Dillon appear to have the best claims at this writing, 1914, as Chip twice knocked Klaus out. Mike Gibbons is also a legitimate claimant at 158 ringside.

1914—During the year 1914 Jimmy Clabby's showing was such as to entitle him to claim championship at 158 pounds ringside, dividing the honor with Jeff Smith of New York, who has equal claim.
